Foreword

For me, the publication of any new dictionary provides interest and pleasure. This should indeed be true for anyone who loves the English language, who takes pride in the way it is used, and who takes pride also in the world leadership in the art of dictionary-making exerted by English-speaking lexicographers.

But the present occasion is one of special pleasure and excitement. The skilled team of lexicographers at Longman (the firm which published Johnson's Dictionary in 1755) have addressed themselves to the task of producing a dictionary specially designed for that most unspecialized readership, the family. There are of course many excellent dictionaries which seek to cater for this public. But the Longman team have given a great deal of original thought, and have conducted a good deal of original research, to ensure that they have the best technique of presentation, the best selection of words and meanings, the best and most informative modes of definition, explanation, and illustration.

To the arduous nature of such fundamental inquiry, I can personally testify, as the chairman of the linguistic advisory group that has been privileged to discuss these issues with the Longman team and to offer help, guidance, and criticism. But many of the admirable features of this dictionary have proceeded from advances in computational technology, to the potentiality of which the Longman Group have been quite exceptionally alert. In consequence, users will find, as they move from word to word, a far higher degree of consistency in treatment than they have been accustomed to; a solid defence against circularity of definition; a guarantee that all appropriate cross-references have indeed been provided.

The general introduction explains the special features in more detail. My happy task is merely to congratulate the team on a magnificent achievement.

Preface

In 1755, Longman published Dr Johnson's Dictionary of the English Language. In the two hundred or so years since then, English has changed considerably, and branched off down some pathways Johnson could never have anticipated, but the underlying characteristics and processes of language that he attempted to classify and describe remain much the same today as in the eighteenth century: a continuing challenge to the art and science of the lexicographer.

With the rapid expansion of science and technology, the vocabulary of English is growing more quickly and exuberantly than at any time in its history. There are simply more words about nowadays than ever there were in the past, and in order to be able to cope with the complexities of late 20th-century life, and understand the messages that are streaming towards us from all sides, we need an up-to-date, reliable, and straightforward guidebook. That is what the editors of this dictionary have attempted to provide: a reference work that gathers together over 70 000 current English words and expressions, from wherever in the world the language is spoken, gives a clear and concise account of their meanings, and offers guidance on the way in which they are used and pronounced.

How have we gone about ensuring that this dictionary is as comprehensive and as useful as possible? I spoke above of the art and science of lexicography: much of the science lies in the collection of evidence about the language, and much of the art in the interpretation of that evidence and in the use of it to create lucid dictionary definitions. No single person could carry in his or her head all the myriad new terms spawned every year in all the various fields of human endeavour, let alone recall them at will, so the lexicographer must collect data. In order to compile this dictionary, we set up an extensive reading programme of current books, periodicals, and newspapers, searching for new words and new meanings of old words. The file of examples of words in context that we have accumulated, which numbers in excess of half a million, enables us to make authoritative statements about the current state of the language over a broad spectrum of subject areas, from biochemistry and computing to the cinema and cricket. As the map on p. xii indicates, we have gathered our evidence from all over the British Isles, and from wherever else in the world English is spoken as a first language.

Once the data has been gathered, it must be interpreted and put into a convenient form for you, the user of the dictionary. This is the art of the lexicographer: to condense and codify the confusing babble of words that fly about our heads every day into an understandable and easily used work of reference.

How is it all done? Well of course no dictionary-maker nowadays starts completely from scratch. In this sense all lexicographers are standing on giants' shoulders, using the basic common core of the language, which has been amply recorded in the past, as the starting-off point for their labours. And the information that has been accumulated about changes in the language is the cue to depart from that point.

For example, the lexicographer working on the word acrobat for this dictionary, which in all other dictionaries is defined in very general terms simply as 'of or relating to an acrobat', found this example of its use by Tina Brown in Punch (February 1976):

'The hero still welds a low, mocking laugh and vertiginously acrobatic eyebrows.'

On the basis of this and other evidence, she was able to record a new meaning of acrobat, 'very mobile', and illustrate it with the Punch quotation.

Another editor, working on the word bottle, had these examples available to her:

'Once I stole a jar of Brylcreem [sic] from the tuck shop. But I didn't have the bottle to carry it through. In the end I took it back again.'

Nik Cohn, Rolling Stone (July 1973)

'Soft, that's what they are. They pay them too much. Kids of 14 with money in their pocket instead of a steel comb. Stands to reason they ain't got no bottle. Know what I mean?'

Llew Gardner, The Listener (June 1974)

'In its 150-year existence, the Metropolitan Police has developed its own group loyalties, inbred customs and language. With the helmet that passes from father to son, goes a demotic inheritance. 'We were mobhanded in the nondescript and chummy's bottle went and we felt his collar' (A number of us were in the unmarked car together and the suspect lost his nerve and we arrested him).'

Michael Cockerell, The Listener (February 1975)

'I simply was not born with the right amount of what is known in cockney circles as bottle. Downright nerve, in other words.'

Christopher Matthew, Punch (October 1976)

'To their critics, their [West Ham's] failures have not been down to their refusal to kick their way to the top, but to lacking the character, the 'bottle' to make their skill count.'

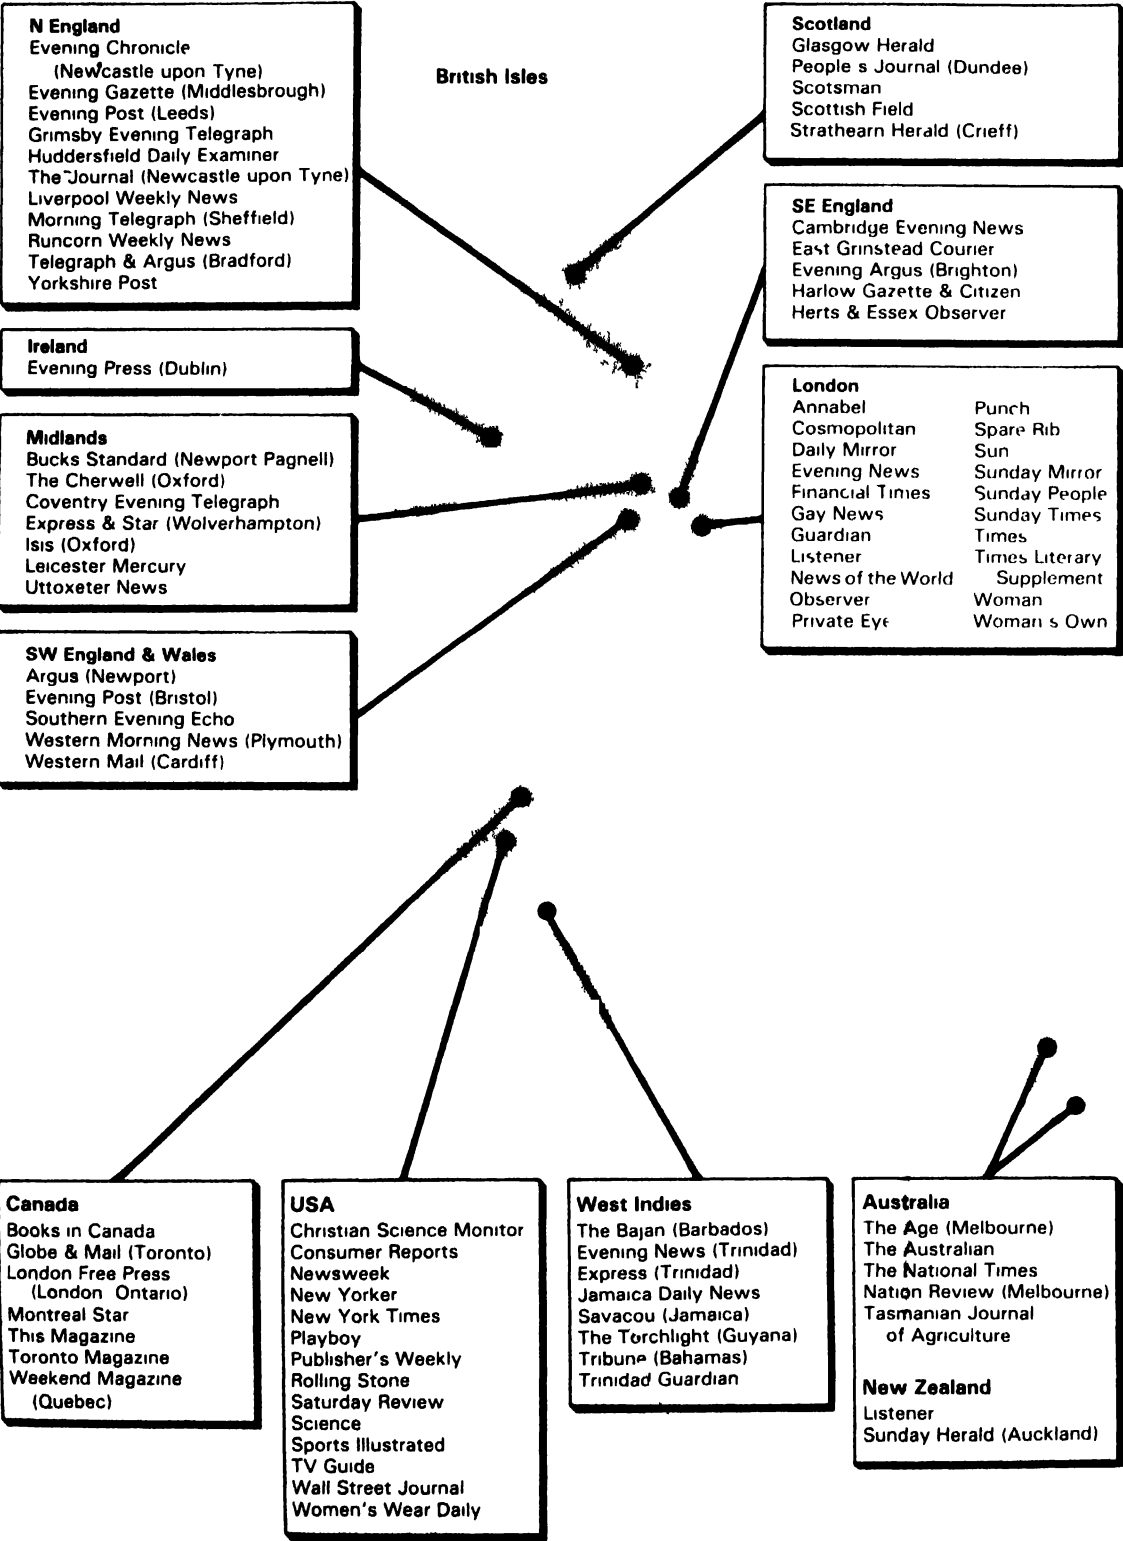

Time Out (May 1980)

These enabled her to enter the British slang meaning of bottle, 'nerve', which does not appear in any other dictionary of comparable size.

If one facet of the lexicographer's art is the identification of new meanings, another, and perhaps even more important one, is the writing of clear, understandable, and unambiguous definitions. We have striven in this dictionary to make the meanings of the 50 000 words we define as accessible to the user as is possible within what is, in lexicographic terms, a fairly limited scope. We have avoided overly technical terms where we can, and where their use is unavoidable we have ensured that they are in their turn clearly defined at their own entry in the dictionary.

Of course, in such a huge undertaking few individual human beings could hope to apply such standards with absolute consistency throughout. This is where technology of the computer comes to the aid of the art of lexicography. Longman have devised a unique processing system that has enabled us to perform a number of automated operations on the dictionary that previously could only have been done manually, with much labour and less than 100 per cent accuracy, or indeed might not have been attempted at all. Among the tasks the computer has performed for us has been the monitoring of every word we have used in definitions. This has involved, in the first place, a cross check against all the entries, to make sure that every word used in a definition is itself defined in the dictionary; and in the second place, a careful examination of all vocabulary items used in definitions in over 180 different subject areas, ensuring consistency of treatment and the elimination of words that would present too great difficulty to the non-expert

Some sources used in compiling the dictionary

For example, the following 80 specialized terms have been used in definitions of words relating to photography.

aperture	flashbulb	photographic	shadow
black-and-white	flashlight	photography	sharp
bright	f number	picture	shutter
camera	focus	plate	silver
cinematographic	ground glass	positive	slides
colour	hand-held	print	sodium
contrast	image	projector	spectrum
dark	iris	radiation	speed
darkroom	lamp	rays	spool
develop	lens	reflected	still development	light	reflection	subject diaphragm	lightproof	reproduce	take emulsion	light-sensitive	reproduction	television
enlargement	mounted	safelight	tones
expose	moving	screen	transparency
exposure	negative	sensitive	transparent
fast	opaque	sensitivity	view
filter	optical	sensitized	viewfinder
film	paper	setting	wide-angle
fixing	photograph	shade	zoom

Of these, the most common are

photographic	48 occurrences	light	12
photograph	29	picture	12
film	22	plate	12
camera	20	print	11
image	16	negative	10
lens	16	photography	9

Technology in the service of art For although lexicography is fundamentally about the exercise of judgment, it should never be subjective judgment unsupported by evidence The definition-writer's skill, of teasing out meanings and encapsulating them elegantly and concisely, must always be subject to the corrective of linguistic fact And this holds true just as much in the area of usage as in the area of meaning We do not see it as part of the job of a dictionary to propound arbitrary rules for 'correct English' based on yesterday's usage, rather it must be a dispassionate observer and recorder of current linguistic trends. This stance should not, however, be viewed as an abdication of the responsibility to inform, for opinions on the 'correctness' of certain words and meanings are part of the linguistic facts about those words and meanings, and this dictionary attempts to give an accurate record of such opinions where they are widespread For example, we note that the meaning 'uninterested' for disinterested (which in fact predates the meaning 'unbiased') is 'disapproved of by some speakers'. This is not a prescriptive dictionary; but it does set out to describe the prescriptions that exist in English. It is and must always remain the responsibility of the speakers and writers of the language to decide whether they will abide by them or flout them.

Recognizing the need to give clear and up-to-date guidance on English pronunciation, we have, with the help of market research, devised a system that is a significant advance over previous ones in its comprehensibility. It relies almost exclusively on the spelling system of English, thus avoiding the unfamiliar symbols of the International Phonetic Alphabet and the confusing use of accents and other marks that change the value of a letter

Language is always one jump ahead of lexicography; or, as Samuel Johnson more elegantly phrased it in the Preface to his Dictionary, 'there never can be wanting some who will consider that no dictionary of a living tongue ever can be perfect, since while it is hastening to publication, some words are budding, and some falling away' But it is our belief that the lexicographic and computational expertise devoted to this book enable us to claim a unique place for it as a mirror of the current state of the English language, and that the contributions of the many expert consultants listed on pp vii–viii, and of our own specialist editors, have ensured that another of Johnson's disclaimers, 'that he, whose design includes whatever language can express, must often speak of what he does not understand', need no longer be made stress mark showing secondary stress (13.2.2)

another stress pattern that can be used without otherwise changing the pronunciation (13.2.4)

two pronunciations separated by also, indicating that they are variants but that the second is less common, or is considered less correct by some speakers (13.4.1)

pronunciation showing specialist and regional variant (13.4.3) specialist pronunciation, in this case indicating that the word is pronounced differently by sailors (13.4.3)

stress mark showing primary stress (13.2.1) stress pattern shown in compound words and phrases (13.2.3) swung dash indicating that the plural is pronounced in the same way as the singular (13.3.5)

two pronunciations separated by often, indicating that they are variants but that the second is considered incorrect by many speakers (13.4.1)

How to use this Dictionary

1 How to find the word you want

All the words defined in this dictionary, both single words and compounds, are entered as main entries in strict alphabetical order. Words that are not defined, because their meaning can easily be guessed from their base form plus the added ending, are entered under their base form (Sec 1.2). Idiomatic phrases are entered under the main word in the phrase (Sec 1.3).

1.1 Main entries

Strict alphabetical order of entry, letter by letter, applies to all main entries: whether they are single words, hyphenated words, or compounds consisting of two or more individual words. This means that, for example, give away comes between giveaway and give in:

'give n
give-and-take n
'giveaway n
give away vt
give in vt
given adj
'given name n

A compound written as a single word comes before the same compound written with a hyphen, which in turn comes before the same compound written as two or more separate words:

rundown n
,run-down adj
run down vt

A main entry with a number in it comes before a main entry with a letter in the same position:

mi-M15
M16
miaow

But main entries that begin with a number are listed as if the number were spelt out as a word:

two-faced
2,4,5-T
two-handed

Main entries beginning with Mc- are listed as if they were spelt Mac-.

Main entries beginning with St are shown with the abbreviation spelt out in full:

Saint Vitus's Dance

Many words that share the same spelling have a different pronunciation or a different history, or are different in grammar. Such words are shown separately in this dictionary, with small numbers in front to distinguish them.

¹head n
²head adj
³head vt

These words are listed in historical order, according to when they first appeared in English.

1.2 Undefined words

Words whose meaning can easily be guessed, because they consist of a base form plus an added ending, are not given definitions. These words (run-ons) are shown at the end of the definition for their base form, and after the etymology, if there is one:

charitable adj — charitableness n, charitably adv

This means that the meaning of charitableness can be guessed from the meaning of charitable plus the meaning of the ending -ness, which can also be found at its own place in the dictionary. Sometimes the undefined entry has the same form as its base, but a different part of speech:

'chink n a short sharp sound — chink vb

This means that the verb chink is obviously related to the noun chink—'to make, or cause to make, a short sharp sound'.

Words whose meaning can be guessed because they consist of a base form plus something added at the beginning are shown at their own place in the dictionary, but with no definition:

indecorous adj

Some words formed with beginnings and endings have a specific meaning, but also a very general one that can be guessed. For these words, the general meaning is shown in the form of an etymology:

airer n a freestanding, usu collapsible, framework for airing or drying clothes, linen, etc [²AIR + ²-ER]

This means that the noun airer has also a very general meaning which is the sum of the meanings of the verb air and the ending -er: 'a person or thing that airs' (See 1.4.7).

1.3 Idiomatic phrases

An idiom is a fixed phrase whose meaning cannot be guessed from the meanings of the individual words from which it is made up. Idioms are shown at the end of an entry, after the etymology and any derived undefined words:

¹call vt — call a spade a spade to speak frankly and usu bluntly

Compound verbs that end in a preposition are treated as idioms, although on the other hand those that end in an adverb, such as give away, are main entries:

put up vt — put up with to endure or tolerate without complaint or protest

Idioms are entered at the first meaningful word they contain. Hence live it up is entered at live, on the ball appears ball, and in spite of is shown at spite. When an idiom has more than one accepted form, it is entered at the first invariable meaningful word it contains. The alternative form is shown after an oblique (/).

¹seed n . . . — go/run to seed /

1.4 Other entries

Abbreviations, and foreign phrases that are commonly used in English, are mostly listed in separate appendixes on pp1141 and 1145. However, some abbreviations that are used like ordinary words, such as the noun IOU and the verb KO, and the many foreign words and phrases that have become thoroughly anglicized, such as ad hoc and coup de grace, are entered in their alphabetical places in the main body of the text. You should check in both places when in doubt.

2 Alternative versions of words

Many words come in pairs, or even trios, that are nearly identical. They may differ only in spelling (eg judgment, judgement), or in their ending (eg excellence, excellency) or even in the presence or absence of a complete word in a compound (eg silk screen, silk screen printing). In this dictionary, common variant forms of a word are shown immediately after the main entry. When the variant is preceded by a comma, it is about as common as the main entry in current standard usage:

judgment, judgement n

When the variant is preceded by also, it is rather less common.

poky also pokey adj

These alternative forms are shown separately as main entries only if they fall more than ten places away from their main form in the alphabetical list.

Variant spellings of the -ize/-ise type are shown in abbreviated form at the main entry.

computer-ize, -ise vt
liquid-izer, -iser n

This means that computerize can also be spelt computerise.

Feminine forms of words are shown in the same way as other variants:

author fem authoress n

Individual meanings, as well as whole main entries, can have variant forms.

excellence n 1 2 3 Excellency, Excellence—used as a title for certain high dignitaries (eg ambassadors)

Variant forms that are entirely or partially restricted to British or American English are labelled Br or NAm.

jail, Br also gaol n ...
gaol vb or n, chiefly Br (to) jail

This means that the spelling jail is used everywhere in the English-speaking world, but British English also uses gaol (See 8.2).

If the variable part of a pair of words is shown as a main entry in its own right, then this variation is not shown in the entry for the word formed from it. Hence hemorrhage, the American variant spelling for haemorrhage, is not shown because hemo- is already entered as the American variant of haemo-.

3 Parts of speech

These are the various word classes to which the entries in this dictionary belong:

adj	adjective:	energetic, durable
adv	adverb:	very, happily
comb form	combining form:	Anglo-, mal-
conj	conjunction:	but, insofar as interj	interjection:	hey, bravo
n	noun:	dynamite, bird of paradise
prefix		pre-, trans-
prep	preposition:	for, according to
pron	pronoun:	herself, ours
suffix		-ful, -ness
trademark		Hoover, Vellum
vb	verb (both transitive and intransitive):	agglomerate, americanize
vb impersonal	impersonal verb:	methinks
verbal auxiliary		can, must
vi	intransitive verb:	arise, arrive
vt	transitive verb:	indicate, thank

Sometimes two parts of speech are combined:

zileh ... adj or n, chiefly NAm zero yelp ... vi or n (to utter) a sharp quick shrill cry

4 Inflections

The dictionary shows inflections only if they are irregular, and may therefore cause difficulty. They are written out in full, unless they involve merely the doubling of a consonant or the change of -c to -ck-:

mouse n, pl mice
swat vt -tt-
picnic vi -ck-

This means that the present participle and past of swat are swatting and swatted, and those of picnic are picnicking and picnicked.

4.1 Nouns

Regular plurals of nouns (eg cats, matches, spies) are not shown. All other plurals (eg louse, lice; sheep, sheep, putto, putti) are given. Sometimes alternative plurals are possible:

salmon n, pl salmon, esp for different types salmon or a plural may have an alternative pronunciation.

bath /ba:θ/ n, pl baths /ba:θs/; sense 3 often ba:dhz/

Some plurals are regular but might have been expected to be irregular:

coleus n, pl coleuses

Nouns that are always plurals are shown as follows:

environs n pl

Sometimes an individual sense of a noun is exclusively plural:

victual n 2 pl supplies of food, provisions

Not all plural nouns always take a plural verb. This is shown as follows:

genetics n pl but sing in constr
forty winks n pl but sing or pl in constr

This means that one says 'Genetics is ...' but one says either 'Forty winks is ...' or 'Forty winks are ...'.

Some nouns have no recognizable plural form, but nevertheless can take a plural verb:

police n 2a b pl in constr policemen silent majority n sing or pl in constr

This means that one says 'Several police are ...' but one says either 'The silent majority is ...' or '... are ...'.

Some nouns are used with the same meaning in the plural. They are shown like this:

latitude n a region as marked by its latitude — often pl with sing meaning

This means that one can say 'It's very hot at this latitude' or '... at these latitudes'.

4.2 Verbs

Regular verb forms (eg halted, cadged, carrying) are not shown. All other verb inflections (eg ring, rang, rung) are shown. The verb may end in a vowel other than -e:

visa vt visaling; visaed

The verb may keep its final -e before the inflections:

singe vt singeing; singed

A pronunciation may be irregular:

assemble /ə'sembəl/ vb assembling /ə'sembling/

There may be alternative inflections:

spell vb spelt ... NAm chiefly spelled

Inflections are shown in the following order:

present: 1st, 2nd, and 3rd person singular; plural; present subjunctive; present participle, past: 1st, 2nd, and 3rd person singular; plural; past subjunctive; past participle

For any given verb, only the irregular inflections are shown. Certain forms (eg the entire past tense, or the past tense and the past participle) are combined if they are identical. Thus in

run ... vb -nn-; ran; run

the present participle is running, the entire past tense is ran, and the past participle is run.

Irregular American and archaic inflections are listed as separate entries in the dictionary, but are not shown at the main form of the verb

²dove /dohv/ NAm past of DIVE hath archaic pres 3 sing of HAVE

4.3 Adjectives and adverbs

Adjectives and adverbs whose comparative and superlative are formed with more and most, or by adding -(e)r and -(e)st (eg nicer, fastest, happier), are not shown. All other inflections are shown.

Inflections that involve a change of pronunciation are shown

So are alternative inflections

4.4 Pronouns

Inflections of pronouns are entered at their alphabetical place in the dictionary and cross-referred to their main form

²her pron, objective case of SHE

The definition is given at the main form

5 Capitalization

Some words, or meanings of words, can be used with or without a capital letter and we show this with the notes often cap and often not cap. In the case of compound words, the note specifies which parts are capitalized pop art n, often cap P&A

6 How the meaning of words is shown

Sometimes, instead of giving a definition, the dictionary describes how a word is used

²after prep 3 used to indicate the goal or purpose of an action <go - gold>

Trademarked terms too are treated in this way.

Hoover trademark -- used for a vacuum cleaner

Most words, however, are given ordinary dictionary definitions, with one or more meanings

6.1 The numbering of meanings

The main meanings of a word are numbered:

tress n 1 a plait of hair 2 a long lock of hair — usu pl

When a numbered main meaning of a word is divided into subsenses, they are introduced by letters:

quite adv or adj 1a wholly, completely . . . b positively, certainly Divisions of a subsense are indicated by bracketed numbers:

¹take vb 1a c(1) to capture and remove from play . . . (2) to win in a card game

When a definition is followed by a colon and two or more subsenses, this indicates that the meaning of the subsenses is covered by the introductory definition. The colon may be followed by eg when the subsenses are a representative sample rather than a complete list of meanings:

activate vt 1 to make (more) active or reactive, esp in chemical or physical properties: eg a to make (a substance) radioactive b to aerate (sewage) . . .

Sometimes an introductory definition is simply the common element shared by the following subsenses:

cheapen vb to make or become a cheap in price or value b lower in esteem c tawdry, vulgar, or inferior

This indicates that cheapen means 'to make or become cheap in price and value', 'to make or become lower in esteem', and 'to make or become tawdry, vulgar, or inferior'

When two meanings of a word are very closely related, they are not separated off with numbers or letters, but run together, with the word esp, specif, also, or broadly between them to show the way in which they are related.

aggression n 2 attack, encroachment, esp unprovoked violation by one country of the territory of another

6.2 The order in which senses are shown

Those meanings that would be understood anywhere in the English-speaking world are shown first, in their historical order. The older senses before the newer. After these come the meanings whose usage is restricted in some way (eg because they are used in only one area, or have gone out of current use)

6.3 Brackets

Round brackets are used in four main ways in definitions in this dictionary

They enclose the object of a verb

²contract vt 2a to catch (an illness)

They give extra information

³nap n a hairy or downy surface (eg on a woven fabric)

They separate the parts of a combined definition that relate to different parts of speech.

cheep vi or n (to utter) a faint shrill sound characteristic of a young bird

They enclose optional wording:

afloat adj or adv 1a borne (as if) on the water or air

This indicates that afloat means both 'borne on the water or air' and 'borne as if on the water or air'

7 Examples

Definitions in this dictionary, particularly of those words with several different senses, may be followed by an example phrase or sentence illustrating a typical use of the word in context. Many of these are actual quotations from a written, or spoken, source, in such cases the author or source is given

Examples are printed in italics between angle brackets (< >). Occasionally the word being illustrated is written out in full, but usually it is represented by a swung dash (~)

high-octane adj having a high octane number and hence good antiknock properties <~ petrol>

When an inflected form of the main entry is being illustrated, it is usually shown by a swung dash followed by the inflection.

The complete example is therefore 'dared the anger of her family'

8 Usage

There is more to a complete description of a word than a definition of its meaning; many words have peculiarities of usage that a dictionary must take account of. They may be restricted to a particular geographical area, they may be colloquial or slang, or felt to be 'incorrect', they may have fallen out of use; and there may be limitations on the sort of context they can be used in.

This dictionary shows such restrictions in two different ways. Words, or meanings, that are limited to a particular period or area are identified by an italic label:

fain adv, archaic 1 with pleasure . . .

howff n, Scot a haunt, resort, esp a pub

When an italic label comes between the main entry and the first

How to use this Dictionary

xx

definition it refers to all meanings of the word; otherwise, it applies to all subsenses of the number or letter it follows.

All other information on usage is given in a note at the end of a definition:

tootsy ... n FOOT 1 — used chiefly to children

When such a note applies to all or several meanings of a word, it follows the last definition, and is introduced by the word USE:

8.1 Words that are no longer in current use

The label obs for 'obsolete' means there is no evidence of use for a word or meaning since 1755 (the date of publication of Samuel Johnson's Dictionary).

choler ... n ... 2a ... b obs BILE 1a

The label obs is a comment on the word being defined, not on the thing it designates. When a thing, as opposed to the word for it, is obsolete, this is indicated in the definition:

peruke ... n a long curly wig worn by men in the 17th and 18th c

The label archaic means that a word or meaning once in common use is found today only in special contexts, such as poetry or historical fiction, where it is used to introduce a flavour of the past:

egad ... interj, archaic — used as a mild oath

¹travail ... n ... 2 archaic labour pains

Some of the more common archaisms that tend to linger on in poetic diction are treated more explicitly by means of a note.

e'en ... adv even — chiefly poetic

The same treatment is given to comparatively modern terms which have become old-fashioned because they belong to rapidly changing areas of vocabulary such as science and technology, or casual everyday speech:

matron ... n ... 3 a woman in charge of the nursing in a hospital — not now used technically crispe ... interj, Br — used to express surprise; no longer in vogue

8.2 Words that are not used throughout the English-speaking world

A word or sense limited in use to one or more of the countries of the English-speaking world is labelled accordingly:

The label Br indicates that a word or meaning is used in Britain and also usually in the Commonwealth countries of Australasia. The label NAm indicates the use of a word or meaning in both the USA and Canada.

A word or meaning whose use is limited to a particular part of Britain, or occasionally of the USA, is labelled accordingly:

²hinny ... n, Scot & N Eng DEAR 1b

you-'all pron, chiefly S US you

The label dial for 'dialect' indicates that a word or meaning belongs to the common local speech of several different places:

critter ... n, dial a creature

All the abbreviations used in such labels as these may be found inside the front cover.

8.3 Words that suggest a particular style, attitude, or level of formality

Most English words can be generally used in both speech and writing, but some would be traditionally described as 'colloquial' or 'slang', and others, perhaps, as 'formal'.

Words of this sort are identified in the dictionary by notes at the end of definitions. It is always hard to apply such descriptions consistently, since the status of these words is constantly shifting with the passage of time, and they are also frequently used in an incongruous setting for stylistic effect.

The note '— infml' is used for words or senses that are characteristic of conversational speech and casual writing (eg between friends and contemporaries) rather than of official or 'serious' speech or writing:

snifter ... n a small drink of spirits — infml

creepy-crawly ... n, Br a small creeping or scuttling creature (eg a spider) — infml

The note '— slang' is used for words or meanings usually found in contexts of extreme informality. Such words may be, or may have been until recently, used by a particular social group such as criminals or drug users. They often refer to topics that are thought of as risqué or 'low':

porridge ... n ... 2 Br time spent in prison — slang

plissed adj, Br drunk — slang

At the opposite end of the scale, the note '— fml', for 'formal', is used for words or meanings characteristic of written rather than spoken English, and particularly of official or academic writings:

importunate ... adj ... extremely persistent in request or demand — chiefly fml

Some notes describe the attitude or tone of the user of a word:

egghead ... n an intellectual, highbrow — derog or humor

pass away vi ... 2 to die — euph

All the abbreviations used in such notes as these may be found inside the front cover.

8.4 Words that are not 'correct'

It is not the role of a responsible modern dictionary to dictate usage, it can only make statements, based on reference to a large stock of spoken and written data, as to how a word is being used by the community at large. Where appropriate it can also warn the dictionary user that a use of a word is likely to arouse controversy or disapproval. Many people would disapprove of the use of some of the words we have described as 'slang' or 'informal', and there are of course many contexts in which their use would be quite inappropriate; but there is a further distinct class of words that are generally felt to be 'incorrect'.

The note '— nonstandard' is used for words or meanings that are quite commonly used in standard English but are considered incorrect by many speakers:

flaunt ... vt ... 2 to flout — nonstandard

Certain highly controversial words or meanings have the warning note '— disapproved of by some speakers':

disinterested adj 1 uninterested — disapproved of by some speakers

The note '— substandard' is used for words or meanings that are widely used but are not part of standard English.

learn ... vb ... 2 to teach — substandard

8.5 The context in which a word can appear

Many words or meanings can be used only in certain contexts within a sentence: some verbs are only used in the passive; some words can appear only in the negative, along with not, never, etc; others are always used with particular prepositions or adverbs, or in certain fixed phrases. Such restrictions are shown in a note following a definition:

abide ... vb 1 to bear patiently; tolerate — used negatively agree ... vi ... 2a to be of one mind — often + with <I ~ with you>

dump ... n pl a gloomy state of mind; despondency — esp in in the dumps

Sometimes a word that is commonly used with the main entry word in a sentence is printed in italic within the definition:

allude ... vi to make indirect, casual, or implicit reference to ²altogether n the nude <posed in the ~> — infml

This means that allude is almost always used in the phrase allude to, and that the noun altogether is almost always used with the.

9 Cross-references

Cross-references draw your attention to a related word in another part of the dictionary. Any word printed in SMALL CAPITAL letters is a cross-reference.

An entire definition may take the form of a cross-reference. This happens either when the word used in the definition has more than one meaning, and it is necessary to specify which meaning is referred to:

flash n 6a c FLASHLIGHT 2 or when the word used in the definition is a compound that is a main entry in the dictionary

rubella n GERMAN MEASLES

A cross-reference that refers you to another entry that is related to the one you have looked up, or that may give you additional useful information, is introduced by 'compare':

white-collar adj — compare BLUE-COLLAR

Variant forms of prefixes and combining forms—that is to say, alternative spellings used when combining with different base forms (e.g. the im- form of in- in words like impossible)—are shown as follows in the alphabetical list.

con- see COM

oestro- — see OESIR-

Full information about them may be found at the main entry.

Entries followed by an eye symbol • cross-refer you to an illustration or table on the facing page.

music n 3 the score of a musical composition set down on page USE •

Entries followed by a hand symbol ✋ cross-refer you to an illustration or table appearing at a main entry elsewhere in the dictionary.

air marshal n ✋ RANK

10 Prefixes, suffixes, and combining forms

Word elements that can be used to form new words in English are entered at their alphabetical place in the dictionary. These elements are prefixes (e.g. pre-, un-), suffixes (e.g. -ous, -ly), and combining forms (e.g. Anglo-, -logy).

Suffixes and combining forms added to the end of a word may alter the grammatical function as well as the meaning of the word. Where appropriate, this change of part of speech is indicated as follows:

-ful suffix (n→adj) full of <evenful> <colourful>

This means that the suffix -ful is added to nouns to make adjectives.

11 Abbreviations

All abbreviations are listed in a separate appendix on p 1145. Some abbreviations that are frequently used as 'words' are entered in the main body of the text. Examples of these are sae and PVC, which are shown in the main alphabetical list as nouns.

Abbreviations and symbols used in the dictionary itself are listed inside the front cover.

12 Foreign words and phrases

Foreign words and phrases that have become thoroughly anglicized (e.g. in pronunciation) or have acquired a part of speech are entered at their alphabetical place in the dictionary:

prima facie /ˈpri:mə ˈfayʃi/ adv ...

coup de theatre /dɔ ˈtəʃəˈtri:(ə)/ n ...

Other foreign expressions are listed in a separate appendix on p 1141, with their source and language of origin where appropriate.

13 Pronunciation

Most of us have at some time or other had a disagreement about the pronunciation of a word, or perhaps we have simply come across a new word when reading and have wanted to know how it is pronounced. Unfortunately, when we look the word-up in our dictionary we are often confronted with a baffling series of symbols which we do not understand.

The pronunciation entries in this dictionary are concise and easy to understand, since they are based almost entirely on English spelling, and special characters or marks have been avoided.

13.1.1 Type of pronunciation represented

The dictionary attempts to give all the most common variant pronunciations of each word. It would not, however, be possible to include all the regional and social variants, and so the pronunciation represented here is what may be called a 'standard' or 'neutral British English' accent: the type of speech characteristic of those people often described as having 'no accent'. A better definition would be that it is an accent that betrays nothing of the region to which the speaker belongs.

Different age groups may also pronounce words differently. Some pronunciations that have become so old-fashioned as to be used only by the elderly have been excluded, as have certain others which have recently come into vogue amongst the young but which are not yet sufficiently established to be worthy of inclusion.

13.1.2 Choice of symbols

English spelling is often a poor guide to the pronunciation of a word. In bough, cough, rough, thorough, though, thought, and through, the sequence ough represents seven different sounds. There are in fact 23 vowel sounds in English (see the chart below) and only five letters (a, e, i, o, u) in the spelling to represent these sounds. Nevertheless, by choosing those combinations of letters which are regularly used in English spelling to represent a particular sound, it is possible to produce a pronunciation system that is quick and easy to learn.

Vowels

a	as in	bad, fat
ah	..	father, oompah
aw	..	saw, awful
ay	..	make, hay
e	..	bed, head
ee	..	sheep, key
ea	..	there, hair
i	..	ship, lick
ie	..	bite, lied
ie ə	..	fire, liar
ia	..	here, fear
o	..	pot, crop
oh	..	note, Joan
oo	..	put, cook
ooh	..	boot, lute
oeə	..	jury, cure
ow	..	now, bough
owə	..	our, power
oy	..	boy, loiter
oya	..	lawyer, sawyer
u	..	cut, luck
uh	..	bird, absurd
ə	..	mother, about

Consonants

b	as in	bad
ch	..	cheer
d	..	day
dh	..	they
f	..	few
g	..	gay
h	..	hot
j	..	jump
k	..	king
kh	..	loch
l	..	led
m	..	man
n	..	sun
ng	..	sung
nh	..	restaurant
p	..	pot
r	..	red
s	..	soon
sh	..	fish
t	..	tea
th	..	thing
v	..	view
w	..	wet
y	..	yet
z	..	zero
zh	..	pleasure

All pronunciations are shown within slant lines (/ /): so for instance /e/ is pronounced as it is spelt in led, spied, cried, although this same sound may also be spelt in other ways (e.g. cry, grant, right), and /ee/ is pronounced as it is spelt in meet, street, feet, etc, although this same sound may also be spelt as in stream, key, quay, and people.

Below are a few examples:

cheat	/cheet/	fountain	/ˈfowntin/
luck	/lʌk/	measure	/ˈmezʒə/

How to use this Dictionary

lute /looht/rhyme /ricm/
hair /hca/

thought /thawt/rough /ruf/
knight /niet/

13.2 Stress

13.2.1 Primary stress

In all English words of 2 or more syllables one syllable is more prominent than the others, and we say it has greater stress or primary stress. For instance, in the word paper the first syllable pa- has greater stress than the second syllable -per, and in complete the second syllable has greater stress than the first. In the pronunciation entries the symbol /' is placed before the syllable with primary stress:

paper /'paypə/
complete /kəm'pleet/

13.2.2 Secondary stress

Some longer words also have secondary stress on another syllable; that is, the syllable has some prominence but not so much as that syllable with primary stress. The symbol /' is used before such syllables. For instance, in university the syllable -ver- has primary stress, but the first syllable also has some stress. This is secondary stress, and we show the pronunciation in university as /'yoohni'vuh-səti/

13.2.3 Stress on compounds

Some main entries in the dictionary consist of two or more words separated by a hyphen. If each of these words is listed and given a pronunciation at its own alphabetical place in the dictionary, the hyphenated word is not given a full pronunciation, but only a 'stress pattern':

dry-rot
'cover-up

A main entry which consists of two or more words separated by spaces will be given a stress pattern only if this is not obvious, or if the stress pattern does not depend on the position of the phrase within a sentence:

'easy chair
'mother su perior

but for example go in is not given a stress pattern, because the stress pattern of verb phrases changes according to the sentence:

I 'want to go 'in
I 'want to 'go in 'now

Main entries consisting of two or more individual words are not normally given a full pronunciation. Since the pronunciation in bookcase may be partially guessed from that of book, only the pronunciation of the latter part of the compound is shown, together with a stress pattern:

book /book/
'book case /-,'kays/

13.2.4 Alternative stress patterns

It is sometimes convenient to show alternative stress patterns by using a hyphen to represent each syllable. For example, carrier bag may be pronounced with the primary stress either on the ca- of carrier, or on bag. In such cases, the alternative stress patterns are shown like this:

carrier bag /'---, ---' /

Similarly, if an undefined related word (run-on) has the same pronunciation as the main entry from which it is formed, but a different stress pattern, its stress pattern is shown with hyphens and stress marks:

dry as 'dust adj ... — dryas dust /'---, n

13.2.5 Stress shift

There are certain words for which the stress pattern changes according to the position of the word within a phrase or sentence. For example, brigadier has primary stress on the last syllable -dier, but when this word is used in the phrase brigadier general, the primary stress shifts to the first syllable of general, and there is now secondary stress on the first syllable of brigadier. For words like brigadier, the stress pattern shown is always that which would be used if the word were read out by itself:

brigadier /brɪgə'diə/
but 'brigadier general

(Here, the stress pattern of brigadier has changed because of stress shift.)

13.3 Special symbols

13.3.1 The symbol /ə/

This is the only special phonetic character used in this dictionary. It represents the unstressed vowel sound in mother, about, purpose, and may correspond to many different vowels in ordinary spelling.

13.3.2 Bracketed (ə)

This symbol is used when the sound /ə/ may be either pronounced or missed out, or where its presence or absence is uncertain. Most syllables of English contain a vowel. telephone /'telifəhn/ has three syllables and three vowels, /e/, /ʌ/, and /ə/. But certain consonants can form a syllable by themselves. cattle /'katl/ has two syllables, /'kat/ and /l/. In a word such as memory /'mem(ə)rɪ/, a bracketed /ə/ is used, to show that the /r/ may or may not form a syllable: one can say /'memrɪ/, /'memərɪ/, or /'memr-ɪ/. Similarly, sudden /sʌd(ə)n/ may be pronounced /'sʌdn/ or /'sʌdən/.

The bracketed symbol (ə) may also be used after the vowels /e/ and /oo/

glo /jɪ(ə)rəh/
neuralgia /nyoo(ə)'raljə/

This means that some people pronounce the vowels as /e-ə/ or /oo-ə/ and others simply as /e/ or /oo/

13.3.3 Hyphens

A hyphen in the spelling of a word is not shown in its pronunciation. However, a hyphen is used in pronunciation entries in the following cases i to show that the pronunciation is not a full word and cannot stand alone (e.g. for prefixes or suffixes):

pre- /pri-/
-tion /-ʃh(ə)n/

ii to show that part of the pronunciation has not been repeated:

digest /dɪ'jest, die-/

Since the syllable /-jɛst/ is the same for both variants it is not written twice.

13.3.4 Centred dot

A centred dot (·) separates pairs of letters that might otherwise be wrongly read as one sound. It separates /n/ from /g/ where the sound /ng/ as in sling is not intended, or /t/ from /h/ where /th/ as in through is not intended:

knighthood /'niet·hood/

The centred dot may also occur within a single syllable:

fire /fi·e·ə/

This shows that the sequence /ieə/ should not be read /i-eə/ as in Riviera.

13.3.5 Swung dash

A swung dash (˜) means that the plural is pronounced in the same way as the singular:

hors d'oeuvre ... pl hors d'oeuvres also hors d'oeuvre /duhv(z) (Fr ˜)/

13.4 Variant pronunciations

13.4.1 Alternative pronunciations

In general, the first variant shown is considered to be the most usual, although even if two or more pronunciations are genuinely equal in acceptability, it is inevitable because of the nature of print that one must be placed first on the page. All pronunciations shown may be safely used, with the following exceptions:

1 A pronunciation preceded by also is not so usual as the other pronunciation(s) given, or else though widely used it is not considered correct by some speakers.

controversy /'kɒntrəvɜːsi/; also kən'trɒvəsi/

Here, the first variant /'kɒntrəvɜːsi/ is considered more correct by some 11 A pronunciation preceded by often is commonly used but is generally considered incorrect.

gypsophilia /'jɪp'sɒfɪlə/; often ˌjɪpsə'fɪlɪ-ə/

13.4.2 Common variants that are not shown

There are many words which some speakers pronounce slightly differently from other speakers. Where such differences are very slight, as in the cases below, it has been decided not to show both variants, although each may be quite usual. The fact that the other variant does not appear does not mean that it is in any way undesirable

/ɪ/

The two sounds /ɪ/ and /ə/ are often variants within a word. Some people pronounce the final syllable of bargain, painless, meanless with an /ɪ/ and others with /ə/. Because such words are so very numerous, normally either /ɪ/ or /ə/ is shown but not both

/ʊ/

Words like apiary, anaemia may be pronounced with either /ɪ/ or /ʊ/

apiary /'aɪpɪ-əri/ or /'aɪpyəri/

For such words only the /ɪ/ variant is usually given, except after /l/, /m/, and /n/, where both variants are shown

anaemia /ə'neɪmiə-, -mi-/

n/ŋg

When a prefix such as un- is followed by a /k/ or a /g/ sound, the n may be pronounced either as /n/ or as /ŋg/ungainly /ʊn'ɡeɪnli/ or /ʊŋg'eɪnli/.

Only one variant is normally shown

13.4.3 Foreign and specialized pronunciations

French, German and Spanish pronunciations (Fr., Ger., Sp.) are given where appropriate in IPA (see 13.8). Pronunciations marked naut and tech are those used by experts within the field to which the word belongs.

leeward /'leɪwəd/; naut 'looħ-əd/

Here, ordinary people say /'leɪwəd/ but sailors would say /'looħ-əd/.

13.5 Main entries which are abbreviations

If the main entry consists merely of a sequence of capital letters, such as BA, ESP, or YWCA, the pronunciation is obvious, and so need not be given. However, abbreviations which may be pronounced as a word do receive a pronunciation:

UFO /'juːfəʊ, -foʊ/

13.6 Inflections

Regular inflections are not given a pronunciation unless they are a main entry, in which case the stress pattern alone is shown. Irregular inflections are given pronunciations throughout.

A pronunciation is sometimes shown for the present participle of a verb. The present participle of travel may be pronounced either /'trævliŋ/ or /'travf-ɪŋ/, but that of tunnel can be pronounced only /'tʌnl-ɪŋ/.

The Latin plurals -ae and -i are pronounced in a number of ways, but it is normally necessary to show only one pronunciation: the plural ending -i is shown as /-i:/ and the ending -ae as /-i:/ or /-e:/.

13.7 Strong and weak forms

Many common words have both a strong form and a weak form. The strong form is used only when the word is stressed or carries emphasis. Otherwise the weak form is used.

For instance, if I say 'I am going out', am is pronounced in its unstressed or weak form /əm/. But if someone denies that I am going out, I may repeat the same sentence with a different emphasis and say 'I am going out.' Here I have stressed the verb am, and the strong form /aɪm/ is used.

Since the weak form is the most usual form of the word, this is given first in pronunciation entries and the strong form follows the word stroŋg.

am /əm, m, strong aɪm/

her /hə, ɜː, strong hɜː/

13.8 Foreign words and phrases

13.8.1 American pronunciations

American pronunciation often differs from that of British English speakers, but a specifically American pronunciation is only shown when a word is pronounced in such a way that it might not be recognized by British speakers

clerk /klaɦk/; NAM klɦk/

lieutenant /lef'tenənt/; NAM looh'tenənt/

Some American-influenced pronunciations are gaining popularity in Britain in such words as temporary /'tempərəri/, temporarily /'tempərəriəl/, or mandatory /mən'dəɪt(ə)ri/ instead of the more conventionally British English /'temprəri/, /'temprərəli/, and /mən'dɛɪt(ə)ri/. Such pronunciations are shown only when they are considered to be sufficiently usual to have gained general acceptance

13.8.2 Borrowed words and phrases

Where English has 'borrowed' a word or phrase from a foreign language it eventually acquires an anglicized pronunciation. All such words in this dictionary are given a pronunciation which may be easily used by native English speakers who know nothing of the language from which the word is borrowed. However, many of these words are normally pronounced in a manner that is closer to the original pronunciation, and in these cases the foreign pronunciation is also given within round brackets, using the International Phonetic Alphabet (IPA). This is because many foreign sounds cannot be adequately represented using the English alphabet. The IPA symbols used are as follows

Symbol	French	as in	Nearest English Equivalent

14 Etymologies

14.1 Etymologies are shown in square brackets [] after the definition of a word, but before any derived undefined words or idioms (unless an idiom itself has been given an etymology).

14.2 Within the square brackets, words or word-elements in italics are the source from which the main entry is historically descended. An English word or phrase in ordinary type after such a source-word explains the meaning or function of that source-word:

eulogy ... [... Gk eulogia praise ...]

parturition ... [... L parturitus, pp of parturire ...]

If a source-word is an English word in use since 1501, but is not listed in this dictionary, its meaning is given in round brackets:

frump ... [prob fr frumple (to wrinkle), fr ME fromplen ...]

14.3 Special terminology

14.3.1 fr = from. This indicates various kinds of relationship between one word and another: e.g borrowing, compounding, or grammatical change.

14.3.2 deriv = derivative. This means that at least one intermediate step has been left out in tracing the history of a word:

apricot ... [alter. of earlier abreckcock, deriv of Ar al-birquq the apricot]

Here, the Arabic word may have reached us through Catalan, Italian, French, Spanish, or Portuguese.

14.3.3 alter. = alteration. This means that there has been a change of form, within a single language, following no regular pattern of linguistic change, as with apricot.

14.3.4 modif = modification. This means that there has been the same kind of change in a word borrowed from another language:

boulevard ... [F, modif of MD bolwerck bulwark]

14.3.5 blend. This describes a word formed from two or more constituents which has at least one letter or sound in common with those constituents, or in which part of one constituent is inserted into the other:

smog ... [blend of smoke and fog]

Compounds which do not meet these special conditions are treated differently:

brunch ... [breakfast + lunch]

14.4 Usually the etymology traces the origin and development of a main entry as far back as possible within the recorded history of language, describing (when applicable) the following chief features:

i Earlier forms in English Whenever an etymologized word is a descendant of a word recorded in either or both of the earlier periods of English, its occurrence in the earlier period(s) is noted, and its form and meaning are stated if they differ from the present form of the main entry, or from the earliest sense defined:

clog ... [ME clogge short thick piece of wood]

clot ... [ME, fr OE clott ...]

ii Loanwords When a word has been borrowed into English at any period from another language, the source-language is identified, and the form and meaning of the source-word are stated if they differ from those shown for the English word:

join ... [ME joinen, fr OF joindre ...]

polo [Balti, ball]

iii Earlier history of loanwords In the case of most words which belong to the general vocabulary of English, the earlier history of a foreign source-word is traced as far back as possible:

dine ... [ME dinen, fr OF diner, fr (assumed) VL disjejunare to break one's fast, fr L dis- + LL jejunare to fast, fr L jejunus fasting]

Specialized or 'exotic' words which have entered English, such as hummus and sargasso, are often treated rather less fully, and with few exceptions a word from a language outside the Indo-European family is not traced any further back.

iv Pre-history and use of 'akin to' When a word has been traced back to the earliest language in which it is recorded, then—if that language belongs to the Indo-European family—a selection is given of related forms from other languages of this family. Such a list of related forms is preceded by the phrase 'akin to'

hound ... [ME, fr OE hund, akin to OHG hunt dog, L canis, Gk kyón]

A somewhat different use of 'akin to' occurs when a word is known to be derived from a word in a certain group of languages (e.g Celtic or Scandinavian) but cannot be definitely traced to any recognized word in any particular language skulk ... [ME skulken, of Scand origin, akin to Dan skulke to shirk, play truant]

The Danish word shown here is related to the English skulk, which certainly derived from a Scandinavian language; but no more definite relationship between the two words can be established

14.5 If a source-word had the same form as the English word that comes from it, but a different meaning, that meaning is given

nimbus [L, rainstorm, cloud]

If a source-word had the same meaning as the English word but a different form, that form is given. (If there is no language-label before the first word in italics, it is English)

gracile [L gracilis]

If the source word had the same form and meaning as the English word, it appears like this.

scabies ... [L]

The same principles can be applied throughout an etymology:

famous ... [ME, fr MF fameux, fr L famosus, fr fama fame]

If the form, meaning, and language had to be stated in every case, this would be written as:

famous ... [ME famous well-known, fr MF fameux well-known, fr L famosus well-known, fr L fama fame]

14.6 Cross-references

An explicit cross-reference such as 'more at SHILLING' directs you to another main entry where further information about etymology is to be found.

Any mention in italics of an English word listed in the dictionary may be taken as an implicit reference to the etymology (if any) at that word:

chortle ... [blend of chuckle and snort]

Etymological information about both chuckle and snort may be found at their own entries.

A cross-reference is also implied when the same italicized form occurs in two or more etymologies which are not further than ten entries apart. In practice, this means that quite often you must look at adjacent entries for further information:

chrism [ME crisme, fr OE crisma, fr LL chrisma, fr Gk, ointment, fr chriein to anoint; akin to OE groot grit, sand]

Christ . [ME Crist, fr OE, fr L Christus, fr Gk Christos, lit., anointed, fr chriein]

christen [ME cristenen, fr OE cristinian, fr cristen Christian, fr L christianus]

Christendom [ME cristendom, fr OE cristendōm, fr cristen]

¹Christian [L christianus, adj] & n. fr Gk christianos, fr Christos]

Here, the etymology at chrism is the ultimate goal of a chain of implied cross-references. If you originally looked up Christendom, you will find further information about cristen, the last form shown there, in the entry for christen, more about christianus, the last form at christen, in the entry for ¹Christian, then the form Christos will take you from ¹Christian to Christ, and finally chriein will lead you to chrism.

14.7 Sometimes the material in square brackets consists of a base form plus a beginning or ending, printed in SMALL CAPITAL letters

animation [²ANIMATE + -ION]

This does not mean that animation was formed in modern English from animate and -ion (in fact, the word was borrowed into English from Latin animation-, animatio), rather, it shows that the word means 'the act of animating', which is the sum of the meanings of animate and -ion.

The components shown are not necessarily in exactly the same form as the main entry

dissolution [DISSOLVE + -ION]

14.8 When a main entry covers two or more parts of speech, the etymology usually shows which part of speech was the first form in English and/or was the source-word in another language.

¹conscript n or adj [adj ME, fr L conscriptus, n fr adj]

This means that the English noun conscript came from the English adjective conscript, which in turn was borrowed from the Middle French adjective conscript.

14.9 When one (or more than one) of the numbered meanings of a word has an origin which is not strictly identical with that of the other meaning(s), although not sufficiently different to justify listing it as a separate main entry, extra information about it is given attrition [1 attrition-, attritio, fr attritus, pp of atterere to rub against, fr ad- + terere to rub — more at THROW, (1) ME attricion, fr (assumed) ML attrition-, attritio, fr L.]

walking [(1) fr prp of walk, (2) fr gerund of walk]

14.10 Sometimes, in place of or in addition to the history of a word, an etymology offers an explanation of why that word is used with a particular meaning. Such explanations are always introduced by 'h' candidate [L candidatus, fr candidatus clothed in white, fr candidus white, fr the white toga worn by candidate- for office in ancient Rome]

kiss of death . [fr the kiss with which Judas betrayed Jesus (Mk 14:44–46)]

14.11 Abbreviations used in etymologies for the names of languages are listed inside the front cover. In addition, the following points may be noted i Many technical terms used in the sciences and other specialized studies consist of words or word-elements which are current in at least two languages, with whatever minor changes of form are needed to adapt them to the structure of each individual language. Frequently one does not know which particular language they were originally formed in. The label ISV (International Scientific Vocabulary) is therefore attached to any such term which is not positively known to have originated in English:

carbide [ISV]

glyc- [ISV, fr Gk glyk- sweet, fr glykys]

ii The labelling and representation in writing of words from the Indian subcontinent presents a problem. When they were borrowed into English, the language of most of them was generally called Hindustani; but since partition in 1947, more commonly the names Hindi and Urdu have been used to denote the two similar but divergent main forms. Hindi, written in the Sanskritic (Devanagari) alphabet, is the form adopted in India, Urdu, written in Perso-Arabic characters, is the form adopted in Pakistan. In this dictionary, the label Hindi has generally been used in the wider sense formerly conveyed by Hindustani: 'a group of Indic dialects of northern India of which literary Hindi and Urdu are considered diverse written forms'. Words thus labelled are either common to Hindi and Urdu (eg lac, sari) or specifically Urdu (eg lascar, sahib), specifically Hindi words have usually been labelled Sanskrit, whether they came into English directly from Sanskrit (eg Krishna) or via Hindustani (eg maharishi).

iii With a few special exceptions, a word borrowed from Latin or Greek is ascribed to the earliest period in which it is recorded in either of those languages with the same meaning that it has in the borrowing language regardless of the date of the borrowing. Borrowings from other languages divided into historical periods, such as 'Old' and 'Middle', are attributed to the period corresponding to the date of the word's first recorded borrowing. In the cases of 'Old Italian', 'Old Portuguese', and 'Old Spanish', however the term 'Old' does not denote a definable period, but indicates a form in Italian, Portuguese, or Spanish which was borrowed into the Old or Middle period of another language.

iv The label 'native name', followed by the name of a country or region, is used in a few instances when it has been impossible to determine which particular language of that place the word comes from.

koala [native name in Australia]

14.12 Words from other alphabets

All forms from other alphabets (Hebrew, Arabic, Greek, Sanskrit, Chinese, Cyrillic, etc) are presented in the Roman alphabet.

In representing forms from tone languages, such as Chinese, small superscript figures are used to indicate the tone of the word or syllable which they follow. For Chinese words, the Wade-Giles system of romanization is used.

14.13 Main entries without an etymology

When lack of evidence makes it impossible to supply any satisfactory etymology, the phrase [origin unknown] is used. When a word is given no etymology, this is usually not because of lack of evidence but because it is considered that an etymology is unnecessary. This applies to any word which is

- i a trademark (eg Vaseline)
- ii the name of a tribe or people in its own language (eg Zulu)
- iii an interjection which is a natural non-linguistic sound (eg bah, ugh, whee)
- iv derived from the name of a person or place fully identified in the definition (eg Tokay)
- v a shortened or contracted form (eg exam, o'er)
- vi a spelling variant of another word to which it is cross-referred (eg kadi, kaftan)
- vii an inflected form of a verb, noun, or adjective to which it is cross-referred (but special forms, such as better and went, and forms of the verb be, do have etymologies)
- viii a compound, derivative, or phrase created in English by the combination of forms listed in this dictionary, provided that the identity of each component is clear. Thus no etymology is given for toothpaste (from tooth + paste), for dehumanize (from de- + humanize), or for polygyny (from poly- + -gyny)
- ix a word formed by the addition of an easily-recognizable suffix to an English word, although it may have been formed in a language other than English. Thus impressionism has no etymology because it is an obvious derivative of impression, which in turn is clearly related to impress, although in strict point of fact both impression and impressionism were borrowed into English from French forms. In the same way,

undefined related words (runons) have no etymology, even though in some cases such words may have appeared in English before the base form or have been formed in a different language (as immortality is actually a borrowing from French and is at least as old as the base word immortal) created in English by change of grammatical function (as the verb talk led to the noun talk) from a word listed, with an etymology, above (or occasionally below) it.

The evolution of the alphabet

This diagram illustrates the history of the alphabet by showing how one of the original Semitic letters, shin, has evolved in some of the principal descendant scripts

Proto-Semitic

The original 22-letter Semitic alphabet was invented in the Palestine/Syria area some time before 1500 BC, probably in imitation of Egyptian writing. Stylized pictures stood for the initial sounds of the things pictured, all Semitic words began with consonants, so the script had no vowels

Western or Canaanite branch

Eastern or Aramaic branch

Mongolian

The Mongolian alphabet is one of several Central Asian scripts descended from the Semitic alphabet, it is written vertically, starting at the left

Early Greek and Etruscan

The Greeks borrowed the Semitic alphabet from the Phoenicians about 1000 BC. They adapted letters for non-Greek sounds to represent vowels, thus Semitic 'alp' (glottal stop) became Greek alpha (a). Greek was written right-to-left and left-to-right in alternate lines, but later settled on left-to-right order

Monumental Roman capitals

The Romans borrowed the alphabet from the Etruscans. These seriated capitals were used for inscriptions on stone, cursive forms developed for handwriting

Later Greek

By about 350 BC the form of alphabet used in Ionia was standardized throughout the Greek world

Arabic

Arabic script is always written cursorily, there is no separate printed form. The letter-shapes are so simplified that some have become identical, and dots are added to distinguish them

Hebrew

The 'Square Hebrew' alphabet used today was developed after 300 BC, previously the Hebrew language had been written in a script belonging to the Western Semitic branch. Like Arabic, Hebrew is written from right to left National cursive hands

After the Roman Empire broke up, divergent forms of script evolved in various parts of Europe

Anglo-Irish

Black-Letter or 'Gothic'

Carolingian

Cyrillic

Russian uses an alphabet invented in the 9th century by St Cyril, it derives from the Greek alphabet, supplemented by Hebrew letters for non-Greek sounds

The modern 'Roman alphabet'

15th-century Italian typographers combined Carolingian minuscules with Monumental capitals to create an alphabet with distinct upper and lower case shapes for most letters. Small s had two forms, 'short s' being used only at ends of words until it supplanted 'long s' in the 19th century.

Types of script

The several hundred writing-systems of the world are based on many different principles. This diagram classifies and illustrates the various possibilities in terms of a sequence of choices.

Many primitive tribes have evolved subtle systems for transmitting messages graphically without reference to spoken words. This letter from a girl of the Yukaghir tribe of Siberia to her errant lover expresses a complex message through stylized pictures.

Western mathematics is another such system, a formula such as $\sqrt{100 > 3}$ is understood in the same way by people who speak different languages. This kind of 'writing' is on the increase at present, to create internationally recognizable signs in areas such as clothes care and traffic information.

Chinese script has a separate written symbol for each word or 'morpheme' in the language. (Morphemes are the minimal meaningful elements out of which complex words are built.) Chinese words vary greatly in pronunciation in different regions, but their written form is constant.

brush ink co operate is-called rich

'For brush and ink to co operate is known as richness (in calligraphy).'

Traditionally, Chinese was written vertically downwards, beginning at the right, the left to right horizontal system is also now used.

The Linear B script was used to write Greek before the fall of the Mycenaean civilization about 1200 BC.

ga me mo no Agamemnon

Because there are fewer different symbols in the script than Greek has syllables, pairs of consonants were written by 'borrowing' a 'following vowel' and consonants at the end of syllables were ignored; thus mnan became ma no.

In the Han'gŭl script of Korea, separate features of a sound are symbolized independently.

airstream interrupted hissing between tongue and teeth tongue-tip touches teeth-ridge

Chosŏn 'Morning Fresh' (ancient name of Korea)

Pitman's Shorthand uses a similar system to represent the sounds of English.

Segments are individual consonant and vowel sounds. Does the script include signs for vowels as well as for consonants?

Semitic languages are mostly written in vowel-less scripts. In Hebrew writing, some vowels may be indicated by consonant letters (w for long u, h for long a) but most vowels are ignored. The script reads from right to left.

h t ' k w r b
bārūkh 'attā 'Blessed art Thou'

A system for indicating vowels exactly by adding small marks to the consonant-letters has been invented, but is not normally used in practice.

Mixed systems

Many scripts involve more than one of the principles displayed here. For instance, Japanese writing uses both the morpheme symbols of Chinese and syllabic script comparable to Linear B. English orthography can be regarded as a mixed system, it is approximately phonemic, but the many 'irregularities' tend to provide distinctive spellings for meaningful units, as in Chinese writing. (Compare sign with sign-ature, or right, write, rite, and wright.)

He vencido al ángel del sueño, el funesto alegórico

Spanish is a good example of a language with a 'phonemic' spelling system (one sound - one symbol)

In Indian scripts such as Devanāgarī (used for classical Sanskrit and modern Hindi), groups of consonants are indicated by amalgamating the symbols for single consonants, and vowels are shown by strokes above and below the consonant letters.

The skeleton

Ball and socket joint

Hinge joint

Joints vary in their strength and range of movement. Ligaments and muscles hold the joint in place, while the lining cartilage and synovial membrane facilitate smooth movement.

Spine

The spine consists of a curving column of 24 vertebrae, separated by cartilaginous discs.

The circulatory system

The heart

The right heart (right atrium and right ventricle) pumps deoxygenated blood through the pulmonary artery to the lungs. The left heart (left atrium and left ventricle) pumps oxygenated blood through the aorta to the body. Arteries carry blood (usually oxygenated) away from the heart, veins carry blood (usually deoxygenated) to the heart.

Blood

Red blood cells (corpuscles), which contain haemoglobin, carry oxygen from the lungs to the tissues. White blood cells help to fight disease and infections. Platelets are vital to the clotting process.

Relative sizes of the planets

Scale of space

Outside the solar system, the kilometre is too small a unit for distance measurement – even the nearest star is 40 million million km away. Astronomers instead use units based on the time it takes light to travel the distance. Earth–Moon is thus a distance of $1\frac{1}{2}$ light-seconds; Sun–Earth $8\frac{1}{2}$ light-minutes. Star and galaxy distances are measured in light-years: one light-year is 9 5 million million km.

* light from this galaxy was setting out when the Earth and solar system were being born

Light travels at 300,000 km/sec

Planets

The Earth is one of nine planets orbiting the Sun. The four planets nearest the Sun are relatively small and rocky, like the Earth. The outer planets are huge globes of compressed gases – chiefly hydrogen, helium, methane, and ammonia. The outermost planet, Pluto, is a small solid icy world. Saturn's rings consist of billions of small ice blocks only a metre across, independently orbiting the planet; Jupiter and Uranus have rings too faint to be seen from Earth.

planet	diameter relative to earth	mean distance from Sun (million km)	number of satellites (moons)	period of revolution	period of rotation
Mercury	0.4	58		88 days	59 days
Venus	0.96	108		225 days	243 days
Earth	1	149	1	365 days	24 hrs
Mars	0.5	228	2	687 days	24½ hrs
Jupiter	11.2	778	15	11.9 yrs	10 hrs
Saturn	9.5	1430	21	29.5 yrs	10½ hrs
Uranus	3.9	2870	5	84 yrs	16 hrs
Neptune	3.5	4500	2	164.8 yrs	18 hrs
Pluto	0.3	5910	1	247.7 yrs	6½ days

Comets

A comet is a block of ice and dust about 10 km in diameter, following a very elongated orbit. As it approaches the Sun, the ice evaporates and can grow into a spectacular tail.

Cavity wall

This consists of two parallel 'skins' of brickwork with a gap of 50–75mm in between. The gap prevents damp penetrating to the inside of the house and acts as insulation. The brickwork is joined by metal ties.

Mortar

Mortars are composed of a binder (cement, lime, or a mixture of the two), and aggregate (usually sand) and water. The usual proportions are 1 part binder to 3 of aggregate, but this varies according to the material to be bonded and the strength and weather resistance required of the building. Mortar should be neither much stronger nor much weaker than the materials with which it is used.

Bonds

Wattle and daub was used to fill in the basic timber frame of a house. Poles were slotted into the framework, and twigs or reeds were then woven around them into a hurdle pattern. A layer of clay (daub) was then applied and sometimes coated with plaster.

Lath and plaster consisted of laths nailed to a timber frame and covered with plaster.

Stone walling is divided into two types — rubble and ashlar. Ashlar is a term used only of finely squared and jointed masonry.

Traditional building styles

Timber frame house. The wattle and daub infilling of boxframed timber houses was, from the 17th century, often replaced with brickwork, sometimes using a herringbone pattern

Cob and thatch. Cob is clay or pressed earth reinforced with straw or hair. It is durable if protected from damp at top and bottom

Flint walling is found in S and E England. The corners, doors, and windows are reinforced with brick or stone Pantiles are S-shaped tiles made of clay, which is fired and sometimes glazed. They are now used by architects to give a 'Mediterranean' look to a house.

Pargeting or raised and cut plasterwork on timber frame houses, fashionable in E Anglia in the 16th and 17th centuries.

Weatherboarding was used for houses from the 18th century, when imports of soft wood reached areas where timber-built houses were common.

Lens

The image is brought into focus on the film by adjusting the distance (focal length) between a compound lens and the film. This lens consists of a combination of converging and diverging elements which work together to produce an image that is free from aberration. The simplest compound lens, shown below, comprises a converging element with a weaker diverging element made in a different type of glass to correct the errors caused by using a converging element on its own.

Aperture/diaphragm

This consists of a ring of thin metal blades, between the elements of the lens, which can be opened or closed to increase or decrease the diameter of the aperture at the centre, thus controlling the amount of light entering the camera. The aperture is calibrated in 'F'-stops, each successive stop either halving or doubling the amount of light admitted.

Shutter

This controls the length of time for which light is allowed to enter the camera. The shutter shown here consists of a set of thin metal blades, located behind the compound lens, which are normally completely closed and which open briefly for the required exposure when the shutter is released.

Film

Film can be obtained in either cartridge or spool form, and in a range of speeds. The winding mechanism moves the film through the camera, frame by frame, by means of sprockets which fit into the holes at the sides of the film. The film speed refers to its sensitivity to light. Fast film is used for dark conditions and short exposures, eg action photography. Slow film is used for portraits and high definition photographs.

A transverse front-wheel drive engine

The gearbox is the means by which torque is multiplied and transmitted from the engine to the drive shafts. The different gears allow the engine to operate near its optimum rpm, whatever the speed at which the car is moving.

The camshaft opens the inlet valves and the exhaust valves in the right sequence and at the right time. If (as here) it is not mounted above them, it reaches them through pushrods and rockers.

The universal joints transmit torque from the differential to each front wheel hub through a drive-shaft, which they allow to move as the wheel rises or falls over bumps. Because the wheels have also to be steered, yet must be driven smoothly, a special kind of universal joint is used, known as a constant-velocity joint.

Turbocharger

A turbocharger makes the engine more powerful by using the energy of the exhaust gases to turn a turbine which drives a compressor to blow more air through the carburettor into the cylinders.

A radial tyre

carcass of one or more plies (layers) of fabric cords laid radially (directly from bead to bead)

belt of two or more plies (layers) of steel wire, glassfibre, or fabric cords

Disc brake

Disc brakes. When the brake pedal is pressed, resulting pressure in the hydraulic system makes the caliper assembly push the two friction pads together so that they grip the brake disc and slow the wheel.

carbamide /kə'hb'amied/ n urea [ISV carb- + amide]

carbanion /kə'hb'an,i-ən/ n an organic ion carrying a negative charge on a carbon atom – compare CARBONIUM carbide /kə'hbiəd/ n a compound of carbon with a more electropositive element; esp CALCIUM CARBIDE [ISV]

carbine /kə'hbi:n/ n 1 a short light rifle or musket orig carried by cavalry 2 a short light gas-operated magazine-fed automatic rifle [F carbine, fr MF carabin carabineer]

carbinol /kə'hbi:nəl/ n (an alcohol derived from) methanol – not now used technically [ISV, fr obs G kārbūn methyl, fr G karb- carb-] carbohydrate /kə'hbə'hiedrəit/, -bōh-/ n any of various compounds of carbon, hydrogen, and oxygen (eg sugars, starches, and celluloses) formed by green plants and constituting a major class of energy-providing animal foods

carbolic acid /kə'hb'olik/ n phenol [ISV carb- + L oleum oil – more at oil]

carbon /kə'hb(ə)n/ n 1 a nonmetallic chiefly tetravalent element occurring as diamond, graphite, charcoal, coke, etc and as a constituent of coal, petroleum, carbonates (eg limestone), and organic compounds  PERIODIC TABLE 2a a sheet of carbon paper b CARBON COPY 1 3 a piece of carbon used as an element in a voltaic cell [F carbone, fr L carbon-, carbo ember, charcoal] – carbonless adj carbon 14 n a heavy radioactive carbon isotope (of mass number 14) used in carbon dating carbonaceous /kə'hbə'nayshəs/ adj relating to, resembling, containing, or composed of carbon carbonado /kə'hbə'naydoh/ n, pl carbonados opaque dark-coloured diamond used as an abrasive [Pg, lit, carbonated, fr carbone carbon, fr F] carbonate /kə'hbənət-, -nayt/ n a salt or ester of carbonic acid carbonate /kə'hbənayt/ vt 1 to convert into a carbonate 2 to impregnate with carbon dioxide, aerate  – carbonation /-ˈnaysh(ə)n/ n

carbon black n carbon as a colloidal black substance (eg soot) carbon copy n 1 a copy made with carbon paper 2 a duplicate or exact replica carbon cycle n 1 the fusion reaction thought to be the energy source of most stars, in which 4 hydrogen atoms fuse to form a helium atom 2 the cycle of carbon in living things in which carbon dioxide from the air is caused to react by photosynthesis to form organic nutrients and is ultimately restored to the inorganic state by respiration and rotting carbon dating n the dating of ancient material (eg an archaeological specimen) by recording the amount of carbon 14 remaining carbon dioxide n a heavy colourless gas that does not support combustion, is formed esp by the combustion and decomposition of organic substances, and is absorbed from the air by plants in photosynthesis carbon disulphide n a colourless inflammable poisonous liquid used esp as a solvent for rubber carbolic acid /kə'hb'olik/ n a weak acid that is a solution of carbon dioxide in water and whose salts are carbonates

carbonic acid gas n CARBON DIOXIDE

carboniferous /kə'hbə'nif(ə)rəs/ adj 1 producing or containing carbon or coal 2 cap of or being the period of the Palaeozoic era between the Devonian and the Permian in which coal deposits formed  EVOLUTION – Carboniferous n

- concept /'kɒnsɛpt/ n 1 sthg conceived in the mind; a thought, notion 2 a generic idea abstracted from particular instances [L conceptum, neut of conceptus, pp] – conceptual /kən'septʃuəl/ adj, conceptually adv
- conception /kən'sepʃ(ə)n/ n 1a conceiving or being conceived b an embryo, foetus 2 a general idea; a concept 3 the originating of sthg in the mind [ME concepcioun, fr OF conception, fr L conception-, conceptio, fr conceptus, pp of concipere to take in, conceive] – conceptional adj, conceptive adj

The diagram on the right shows the flow of information (data) within a computer system. Information or instructions can be displayed on the screen of the VDU and put into the computer (input) by typing on the keyboard. The processor takes information from the VDU and either stores it on disk or processes it as directed by a set of instructions in the computer called the program. The processor can also retrieve stored information and show it on the VDU screen, or print it on paper through the line printer (printout), or copy it to magnetic tape for library storage or despatch to another computer. The illustration below shows what the elements of a business computer might look like.

There are several ways of storing data in a form which is accessible to a computer. Magnetic tape, in the form of reel-to-reel, cassette, or cartridge, can store a comparatively large amount of information but the computer may take a long time to find the data it requires. Disks, whether rigid or floppy, have a shorter access time, and solid-state devices are quickest of all, though at present they have a limited storage capacity.

15 inch diameter
stores 11 million words

Winchester
disk drive
5 1/4 inch diameter
stores at least 3 million words

The microcomputer shown on the right is of the kind that might be used by a small business or home enthusiast. Floppy disks are used to store the data and a small printer provides hard copy. The most elementary of home computers consist of a microprocessor, a TV set to act as a screen, and a cassette recorder for storage.

Silicon chips are made from wafers of pure silicon crystal treated so that complete electrical circuits are formed within the solid material (solid state). The wafer is first etched then doped with phosphorus and boron to produce n and p type silicon. Finally aluminium interconnections are laid down with more silicon dioxide. Chips may be made into data storage units (memories), processors (microprocessors) or a combination of both (the microcomputer shown here is the kind of chip used in a programmable pocket computer).
